This is an account of my experiences, personal and professional, of five different German regimes in the last century. I was born in Breslau in 1926 — so the first Germany I knew was the Weimar Republic — and lived under National Socialism until 1938 when I emigrated to the United States, where, by 1951, I was teaching German History.

Five Germanys I Have Known. By Fritz Stern. 560 pp, Farrar, Straus & Giroux, 2006. Purchase. This fascinating volume by Stern -- who, in addition to being one of the great historians of modern Germany and a public intellectual unashamed of being a liberal, has been the provost of Columbia University and a key adviser to Richard Holbrooke when the latter was ambassador to Germany -- is both a rich memoir and a penetrating history of Stern's "five Germanys."
